MONTH AT GLANCE

During the month of February, the Neighborhood Coyote Program continued to document reports and share relevant information to residents who reported coyote activity in their neighborhoods.

Coyotes are most commonly spotted at dawn or dusk but may also be seen at various times throughout the day. At these times, they may emit vocalizations such as howling, yipping, barking, and whining, as they use sound to communicate with their family members or establish territorial boundaries. Contrary to popular belief, coyotes do not vocalize when hunting. They are capable of producing up to 20 different types of vocalizations, including one that sounds similar to a cat or one that sounds like multiple coyotes.
